Introduction: Annales Cambriae B and C in parallel, from AD 954 to AD 1189

This edition shows the two principal Welsh Latin chronicles, B and C, in parallel down to AD 1189.[1] This corresponds to the period between the last annotated annal in the Harleian chronicle (A),[2] and the first year of E (AD 1190).[3]

The Breviate and Cottonian chronicles' (B and C) account of the tenth century continues without a break; indeed, they are dovetailed into the earlier annals by an annal not in A (b974; c276; the corresponding annal in A is empty) which states that Dyfed was laid waste[4] by Iago and Ieuaf, the sons of Idwal.

Structure

The chronology from 954 up to the end of the millennium is complex. B and C are in reasonable agreement down to their annal for the death of King Edgar (b997; c300; AD 975), although B has an extra year after b982, and a year missing after b987. C has an extra annal at c297 noting the royal regatta at Chester of May 973, placed erroneously in the third year before the death of Edgar; B has no corresponding annal. The next section, down to c. AD 998, is puzzling; although B and C have very similar entries, their relative distribution is quite different, with C combining into one annal items that are in separate annals in B. The events of b1005 and b1006 are combined in c308 (and there is perhaps evidence of a scribal eye-jump in C's Sed Eyníaun . . .), and those in b1007 and b1008 are combined in c309. But these amalgamations, and the effect of a missing annal between c312 and c313, are compensated for by a series of annals in C from c319 to c323, all empty, for which B has a single corresponding empty annal (b1020). That these empty annals in C make up the required quantity is proved by enumerating the annals from b976/c278 to b1021/c324 (but excluding the extra annal c297), which shows that both B and C have the same number of annals, forty-six in total, taking the chronicle down to the year AD 998, and the death of Maredudd ab Owain. This date, AD 998, is also stated by S, which up to this point has been running a year in arrears. However, between here and the next annal with an externally verifiable date, b1034/c338 (Sweyn Forkbeard, AD 1013), all the chronicles have lost two years, and C has inserted a notice of Brian Boruma's death

[1] B: the Breviate Chronicle, London, National Archives MS E.164/1, pp. 2–26; C: the Cottonian Chronicle, London, British Library, Cotton MS Domitian A. i, ff. 138r–155r. The basis for the text of the parallel edition is Gough-Cooper 2015a and Gough-Cooper 2015b. J. E. Lloyd made a parallel edition of the chronicles for 1035–1093 (Lloyd 1901).

[2] A: the Harleian Chronicle, London, British Library, Harley MS 3859, ff. 190r–193r. After its annal for 953/954, the Harleian chronicle marks off another twenty-three annals but they are all empty.

[3] E: the Chronicon de Wallia, Exeter Cathedral Library MS 3514, pp. 507–19.

[4] Brut y Tywysogyon (henceforth, P and R) and Brenhinedd y Saesson (henceforth, S), the Welsh vernacular chronicles, say 'twice'. P, 950–952; S, 950.

(AD 1014), anachronistically, in c337.[5] There is only one notice of events in Wales between b1026/c329 and b1036 and b1037/c340 (AD 1016),[6] and a cluster of empty annals (b1027/c330–b1032/c334), which might argue for a lapse in record-keeping during this period.[7]

From the accession of Cnut (b1037/c340; AD 1016) to the end of the century (b1122/c421), B and C are in remarkably close chronological agreement, although C is a year short between 1016 and 1035 (the period covering Cnut's reign). C has an extra annal at c379, and B has split the year 1062 into two segments (b1083 and b1084). B has a necessary extra year (b1096) not found in C, P, R or S, giving it the correct number of years from its annal for AD 1071 down to the death of King William I in AD 1087. Again, the sparse nature of the chronicles for the five years prior to 1087 suggests a lapse in record-keeping after 1081. After 1087, however, both chronicles are in absolute chronological agreement down to AD 1100, with B starting to include AD dates in its annal headers at b1119 (AD 1097).[8]

Soon thereafter, C, P, R and S appear to have omitted the two years AD 1108 and 1109. B has filled this gap with anachronistic annals for the founding of La Ferté Abbey (b1130; AD 1113) and of the Premonstratensian Order (b1131; AD 1120).[9] C inserts extra annals at c425 and c434, and has no equivalent annals for b1130 and b1131.[10]

[5] C is quite confused here. The correct chronological sequence of the annals might be c334 > c336 > c335 > c338 > c337 > c339 > c340.

[6] Namely b1033/c335, the ravaging of Menevia by the Saxons, Eadric and Ubis.

[7] B, P, R and S all have a note (b1023; c. AD 1000) of Dyfed being ravaged by the gentiles.

[8] This AD dating apparatus starts cogently, and runs almost continuously down to the end of the chronicle (there is no annal for 1232). It is arguably an innovation of the late thirteenth century, as, where extracts from English annals are inserted into the chronicle (see below, p. viii), these appear correctly under the stated AD years even where B's chronology is evidently awry.

[9] The association of these events of AD 1113 and 1120 with the annals for AD 1108 and 1109 is mystifying, but might possibly be due to scribal errors reading mcviii for mcxiii and mcix for mcxx.

[10] The vernacular chronicles, S and P, disregard the gap entirely, leaving their dating apparatus, which was two years in arrears before the gap, four years in arrears after it. Jones 1952 and 1971 give a different interpretation of the chronology here: 1101–1103 leads to 1102–1105 (Jones 1952), but comparison with the Latin annals and external dating shows that this should be 1102–1104, and the vernacular annals then stay two years in arrears until 1106–1110 (in Jones 1952, 1106–1109) where they become four years in arrears until their years 1109–1113 (in Jones 1952, 1109–1112) and 1110–1113 (an extra year in C, P , R and S). The dating of the vernacular chronicles then remains variably three or two years in arrears down to their year 1130 (= AD 1133), after which S makes a leap to its year 1133 (= AD 1134), followed by P at 1140, leaving them only one year in arrears down to AD 1170, where they synchronise with the AD date.

There is also a lapse in all the chronicles indicated for the years 1133 and 1134, with B alone inserting a note for AD 1134 on the death of Robert, duke of Normandy.[11] C has three empty annals here (one of them an extra year).[12]

As J.E. Lloyd noted,[13] both B and C have omitted almost two years at 1152 and 1153, as can clearly be seen by comparison with the annals in the vernacular chronicles for the same period. In B and C, however, this omission is concealed, and has been compensated for differently in each case. Between their annal for AD 1135 (the death of King Henry I, b1157 and c456) and their annal for 1155 (the year after the death of King Stephen, b1178 and c476) B has twenty annals to nineteen (the correct number) in C. Taking the relative chronology of the vernacular chronicles as a guide, B is in agreement with their annals up to AD 1145, but then it splits into two its annals for AD 1146 (which it calls AD 1146 and 1147), and for AD 1147 (which it calls AD 1148 and 1149), so that the annal it marks as 1150 (b1172) contains events of AD 1148. C, on the other hand, inserts a unique annal (c459) and then has only two annals (c460 and c461) against three in B and the vernacular annals. C has four annals corresponding to B's split annals for AD 1146 and 1147, and then both B and C have annals (b1174 and c472) for which there is no corresponding annal in P, R or S. Over this chaotic period (AD 1135 to 1154), the chronicles are only all in agreement for the years AD 1143 to 1145.

Near the beginning of the annals for the 1160s, B has an empty annal, b1184 ('1162'), apparently representing AD 1161, but C has no corresponding annal, jumping from its annal for 1160 (c481) to its annal for 1162 (c482). However, C has inserted here (c482) the first of three items relating to the change of archbishop at Canterbury, the death of Archbishop Theobald in 1161. C then adds the consecration of Thomas Becket (AD 1162) to its next annal (c483), corresponding to B's annal for 1163 (b1186 '1164'), and, two annals later (c485), the flight of the Archbishop to Flanders in 1164, which it adds to the end of its annal about Henry II's campaign against the Welsh in 1165. C is an annal short through this period (1155–1165), but B's empty annal for 1161 gives it the correct number of years. This empty annal corresponds to an annal in P stated to be '1160', which is likewise empty, a year, it is said, in which 'nothing happened' (nybu dym),[14] while S has an annal here ('1160') for the death of Pope Adrian IV, who died on 1 September 1159, which perhaps indicates that the source of S also had an empty annal here. There is no corresponding annal in R, [11] This note for AD 1134 is one of a run of similar items in B corresponding to notices in English monastic chronicles, all apparently inserted by a compiler in the late thirteenth century.

[12] P says there was nothing to report for the year 1130, nor for the three years after that; S says there was nothing for 1130, nor for the two years after (seeming to be in agreement with the three empty annals in C).

[13] Lloyd 1928, p. 381f.

[14] The principal hand of P initially went to the death of Angharad ('The year of Christ one thousand one hundred and sixty when Angharad died . . .') but the 'early corrector' of the text has altered oed pan vv to ny bu dym ('nothing happened'), and inserted the start of a new year to the right of the column ('A year after that, died Angharad . . .'). See Jones 1952, pp. 181–2, note to page 62, lines 7–9.

which, similarly to C, moves directly from its annal noting the escape of Einion Clud from prison (P, S '1159') to its annal noting the death of Angharad (P, S '1161').[15]

B and C correspond chronologically until AD 1170, where C has three annals which are all for events of that year, including the murder of Thomas Becket on 29 December 1170 (c492).[16] They are largely in agreement for the next few years, though with B's chronological apparatus still a year in advance of the AD year until at least 1178, marked as the first year of a decennovenal cycle, which B calls '1179'. It is very difficult to interpret the intended chronology thereafter. B has a series of empty annals for its years 1183 to 1186, while C has a series of annals from c498, the decennovenal year 1178, down to c506, the death of Bartholomew, bishop of Exeter, in 1184. Both chronicles then resynchronise with a very similar annal for AD 1187 (b1209 and c507), the defeat of the crusaders at the Horns of Hattin, or, as the chronicles call it, the Tyberiad Sea, and B now states the correct AD year. P, R and S also have quite brief annals from 1177 to 1184, only one of which corresponds to an annal in B, and two which correspond to annals in C.[17] The annals in P, R and S become fuller at 1185, but they have nothing in common with B and C until their annal for 1188, in which they note the fall of Jerusalem (September–October 1187), and the 'taking of the cross' by King Henry and others (early 1188), which B and C place under their annal for 1187.[18]

Content

In their continuation of the tenth-century annals, the chronicles are principally concerned with tracing the fortunes of the descendants of Hywel Dda and Idwal Foel until these dynasties undergo an eclipse in the early years of the eleventh century with the deaths of Maredudd ab Owain ap Hywel Dda (b1021/c324) and Cynan ap Hywel (b1026/c329).[19]

The very first annal for the period shows a general type of annalistic note: 1) the nature of the event, 2) the location of the event 3) the persons involved, 4) the outcome (if any). In annals b976 and c278, the event is the same: B terms the event 'a great slaughter' (cedes magna), where C terms it 'a battle' (bellum); B locates it at 'a place called gurguist' (in loco qui dicitur gurguist),[20] where C says it was 'near the Conwy valley' (iuxta nant conuy).[21] The persons noted are the same: the sons of Idwal

[15] P, R and S have nothing in common here with the corresponding annal in B and C.
[16] S has this in its year 'i' (1171) and P has it in the first year after 1170, perhaps indicating that both are here working to a Nativity year beginning on 25 December.
[17] Morgan Patta of b1200 may correspond to Morgan ap Maredudd of P 1177; c502 and P 1181 both note the death of Pope Alexander III and his succession by Lucius III, and c504 is identical with P 1183.
[18] In effect, P, R and S have no annal for the Annunciation year 1188.
[19] Probably the grandson of Ieuaf ap Idwal Foel (Lloyd 1912, p. 346).
[20] Perhaps now Llanrwst on the River Conwy.
[21] P also calls it 'a great slaughter' (laddua vaur), and cites both place-names 'in the place called Gwrgystu, the battle of Conwy Hirfawr' (yn y lle a elwir gwrgystu Gweith konwy hirmawr).

(Foel) and Hywel (Dda). The annal also says that Edwin ap Hywel died, and Anarawd ap Gwriad was killed; but as is the way of these brief annals, it is not clear if their deaths were connected with the battle. The difference in nuance between the emotive 'great slaughter' and the more prosaic 'battle' may reflect the attitude of the respective compilers, and the different designations of place possibly point to different sources: P appears to use both sets of terms, 'slaughter' and 'battle', and Gwrgystu and Conwy Hirfawr (perhaps equivalent to Nant Conwy in C) which either means that B and C have extracted separately from a source similar to the source of P, or that P has drawn on two sources similar to B and C. The immediately succeeding annals pose the same question: B has eight unique annals between b977 and b1023, and several extra items in other annals, while C has four unique annals between c283 and c337, and some individual touches in other annals, but all of them, without exception, are found in P.[22] Additionally, C has a different pattern of distribution for its annals, as noted above, from c307 to c323, while b1005 to b1020 are distributed in the same way as the annals in P. Both chronicles are occasionally defective, B missing out moritur, or some equivalent, in b988; the name (Magnus) of 'Harold's son' in b993; and omitting the information that Iago was captured by gentiles in b1001. C is less remiss, but notes Cynan ap Hywel at c325 without stating that this is when he held Gwynedd (b1022), similarly noting 'Sweyn, king of England' at c338, but not noting that this was the year[23] that Sweyn gained possession of Æthelred's kingdom and then died (b1034).[24]

The eclipse of the lines of Hywel Dda and Idwal Foel continues into the eleventh century with the appearance of Llywelyn ap Seisyll in Gwynedd. There is some confusion in both B and C. At b1039/c341, both chronicles note the overthrow and deaths of Aeddan ap Blegywryd and his four sons, but whilst C attributes this to Llywelyn (ap Seisyll), B names his son, Gruffudd ap Llywelyn. C has either omitted Llywelyn's patronymic, or, if following B's error, has neglected to preface 'Llywelyn' with 'Gruffudd ap'.[25] There is more confusion at b1043, where B appears to attribute the defeat of Rhain, the so-called pretender, to Seisyll, probably omitting to preface 'Seisyll' with 'Llywelyn ap'. Only B says that Rhain was killed, but both B and C place the action in the mouth of the river Gwili (in ostio Guili).[26] The older Merfynion lines re-emerge c. 1033 (b1054/c356), but B notes only the brothers, Hywel and Maredudd (great-grandsons of Hywel Dda), who came to power in Deheubarth after Rhydderch

[22] P has a great deal of extra material besides, both annals and items within annals. Whether this is extra material accreted to P, or whether B and C have selectively excluded it, is also an open question.

[23] Sweyn was acknowledged king of all England in the autumn of 1013 and died on 3 February 1014; B's annal thus appears to represent events of the Annunciation year March 1013 – March 1014.

[24] At b1033, B notes 'the shipwreck of Sweyn, father of Cnut', for which there appears to be no other evidence.

[25] C also omits the patronymics of both Llywelyn ap Seisyll and Rhydderch ap Iestyn in c346.

[26] C has erroneously written ostilo for ostio; P glosses 'in the mouth of the river Gwili' with 'at Abergwili' (yn nrws auon wyli yn aber gwyli). See also Thornton 2000.

ab Iestyn had been killed by the Irish.[27] C also mentions Iago (Iacob; great-grandson of Idwal Foel), who is said to have been king of Gwynedd when he was killed (c362). On Iago's death, Gruffudd ap Llywelyn ap Seisyll came to power in Gwynedd,[28] and according to B (b1060) in the same year expelled Hywel ab Edwin from Deheubarth. Hywel returned with a fleet of 'heathens' (b1065, classe gentilium; c366, nauibus gentilium), which C alone records as consisting of twenty ships, but he was defeated by Gruffudd ap Llywelyn and killed at the mouth of the river Tywi. In the following year, Gruffudd was further challenged by the rebellion of Gruffudd ap Rhydderch ab Iestyn (c367). The slaying of one hundred and fifty of Gruffudd ap Llywelyn's followers by the nobles of Ystrad Tywi that ensued (b1068/c369) was probably part of this conflict, but C does not record the revenge that Gruffudd ap Llywelyn took on Ystrad Tywi and Dyfed, although its verbless wording here suggests abridgement (dolo optimatum stratewy et dyuet). C has some extra wording in the next two annotated annals (c371 and c374), and b1077 is defective ('Gruffudd son of Rhydderch kills and devastates Hereford') where C has the correct wording,[29] while C has omitted the name of (Magnus) 'Harold's son' in its next annal (c380). Gruffudd ap Llywelyn's death is noted in b1083 and c385, but only B and R say it was through the treachery of his own people (dolo suorum).

The wording of the events of 1066 is substantially different in B and C (b1088/c389), but their annals for the battle of Mechain (b1091/c392) are quite similar, even though C is defective, the scribe omitting bellum at the start and suffering an eye-jump in the middle of the annal so that between Idwal in and bello . maredut frigore it has omitted quo filii Grifini ceciderunt . Idwal. Two annals further on, B has omitted Caradog ap Rhydderch, jointly responsible with the French for the death of Maredudd ab Owain, and the location on the banks of the Rhymni (C: super ripam remny). Thereafter, the Norman predations on Wales commence: Ceredigion is devastated two years running (c395 and b1095/c396); the second time, B alone expressly names Hugh de Mortimer. Annal b1097 is very brief, possibly abbreviated, compared to its counterpart, c397, which notes the consequences of the killing of Bleddyn ap Cynfyn and the battle of Camddwr.[30] Similarly, c398 and c400 give more details than their counterparts (b1098 and b1100), and the latter makes Trahaearn ap Caradog (the victor of the battle of Pwllgwdig) the killer of Rhys and Hywel, sons of Owain, instead of Caradog ap Gruffudd.[31] Although both B and C note the accession of Sulien to the bishopric of St Davids (b1094/c395), C also records Sulien leaving his post and then taking it up again (c400, c402), and his death (c412), whereas B, though oddly not C, notes only his final retirement as bishop c. 1085 (b1107), but not his death. C's annal for the [27] B and C give a bare notice of the battle of Irathwy in the next year, which P says was between the sons of Edwin and the sons of Rhydderch, though P does not state the outcome.

[28] S goes further than P and R, saying that Iago was slain by Gruffudd. P erroneously says that Iago was succeeded by 'his son, Llywelyn'.

[29] C, Grifud filius leuuelin interfecit grifud filium rederch; B, Grifinus filius Riderch occidit. B has apparently omitted . . . Lewelin Grifinum filium . . . or similar after Grifinus filius.

[30] P, R and S, while giving more details about the opposing forces, are all mistaken about the outcome of the battle of Camddwr (Jones 1952, p. 153, note to page 16, lines 26–29).

battle of Mynydd Carn (c403) is corrupt: . . . meilir filius ruallaun et reso filio teudur . . . ('Meilyr, son of Rhiwallon, and (by) Rhys, son of Tewdwr') should be . . . meilir filius ruallaun a reso filio teudur . . . ('Meilyr, son of Rhiwallon, by Rhys, son of Tewdwr'). C also fails to mention the slaying of Gwrgenau ap Seisyll. In its annal for 1086 (c407), C has deliberately omitted the name of the king of the Irish, Toirdelbach Ua Briain, who died in 1086: the copyist of the 1280s could perhaps not make out the name in the source and deliberately left a space for it to be inserted later. There is no corresponding annal in B. There is also a mystifying annal in C for the death of William I of England (c408) which says he was succeeded by edrich frater et ipse Willelmus. This perhaps seems to say that William's successor was 'brother (of) Eadric, and himself a William',[32] but it is unclear what was in the compiler's source here, and b1109 simply states that his successor was his son, William Rufus.

Rhys ap Tewdwr had begun to reign in the South c. 1079 (b1101/c401),[33] but, driven out by the sons of Bleddyn in 1088, he returned the same year with a fleet from Ireland and defeated them. C says that Rhys handed over a large number of captives to the 'gentiles' and the Irish (c409). The next year, the shrine of St David was stolen and looted of its ornaments, but B and C do not say by whom (b1111/c410), and two years after that St Davids was destroyed by 'the gentiles' (b1113/412). Rhys ap Tewdwr defeated Gruffudd ap Maredudd in the same year, but two years after that he was killed by the French of Brycheiniog (b1115/c414). B and C say that, after Rhys's death (whom B describes as 'leader' or 'governor' of Deheubarth: rector dextralis partis), Cadwgan ap Bleddyn plundered Dyfed, and B dates this very precisely to the day before the kalends of May, i.e. 30 April. Both B and C state that, subsequently, about the kalends of July, the French invaded Dyfed and Ceredigion, and built castles in them. 'And thence', B says, 'they occupied the whole of the land of the Britons' (et abinde totam terram britonum occupauerunt).

C has more detail on the events following the death of William fitz Baldwin (b1118/c417). Both B and C have difficulty with the place-name where, according to B, no mean slaughter was made of the French, or where, according to C, they were put to flight, cellidarnauc (B) or kellicaruanc (C).[34] The first c in the latter might well be read t, giving kellitaruanc, but the last four letters are unambiguously -uanc.

In b1119, Gerald is said to be prefectus, 'reeve' or 'justiciar', in c418 dapifer de penbroc, 'steward' or 'seneschal of Pembroke'.[35] P says that Gerald was 'the officer (swydwr)[36] to whom had been given the keepership of the castle of Pembroke', which suggests that penbroc in C refers to the castle, and that dapifer is a more accurate title for Gerald in this context. Both B and C call Gerald dapifer in b1129/c429

[32] Ben Guy has suggested edrich frater might be a scribal error for (h)enrici frater, i.e. 'the brother of Henry' (private communication).
[33] There is the same minimal note in P, R and S.
[34] In P, kelli taruawc, corrected above the line to carnant; R, Kelli Carnant; S, Kelli Carnawc. Jones 1952 ventured 'Celli Tarfawg' (p. 159, n. 20:10), but the place has not been identified.
[35] This is clearly a reference to Gerald de Windsor, but he is never named as such in B or C.
[36] R, ystiwart, 'steward'; but S, wasanaethwr, 'servant'.

B and C have varying accounts of the events of 1098 in Anglesey (b1120/c419). B is somewhat fuller and names one of the Norman earls involved, Hugh of Chester (comes urbis legionum); B's 'other Hugh' (alter hugo) was Hugh de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury. C simply refers to the 'two earl Hughs' (duos hugones consules) but later refers to 'the other earl' (alter consulum), as if it had already named his fellow earl.[37] In the following annal (b1121/c420), noting the return of Cadwgan ap Bleddyn from Ireland after his escape from Anglesey, B is defective, omitting Llywelyn ap Cadwgan as the person captured and killed by the men of Brycheiniog.[38]

The annals following the death of William Rufus in 1100 (b1122/c421) are complex. C has the correct sequence of events, and is fuller, including Henry's marriage to Matilda of Scotland which was celebrated in the following year, July 1101. However, B explains why William had no legitimate heir (nam willelmus . . . concubinus usus et liberis interiit), and adds an anachronistic note about Robert Courthose being captured by his brother, Henry, anticipating the events of 1105–1106. In C (c422) and the vernacular chronicles, the heir of Hugh, earl of Chester, is erroneously called 'Roger', (correctly, Richard; B does not mention Hugh's successor). In the same annal in B (b1123) occurs the first of the items apparently extracted from an English chronicle,[39] which appear in B from here through to the 1270s. C is in error in c423 in calling Robert (de Bellême) Henry's brother (fratrem eius), presumably confusing this rebellious Robert with the duke of Normandy. In b1125/c424, B has the erroneous saresberiam (Salisbury) where C (agreeing with P) has slopesburiam (Shrewsbury).[40] B is further erroneous in b1129/c429 where it has omitted the verb in Geraldus dapifer castellum chenarth bechan where C has firmauit ('Gerald the Steward [established] the castle of Cenarth Bychan'), and also gives an alternative name for the castle, Kilgarran.[41] In its next annal, c430, C refers to Castellum Kenarth.

B omits Owain ap Cadwgan's patronymic in b1133, and makes him a brother of Madog ap Rhiryd (owinus et madocus filii Ririt), but otherwise b1133 and c431 are very similar.

In b1137/c436, each annal has a slightly different wording for Gruffudd ap Rhys's escape from Gruffudd ap Cynan. B says Gruffudd ap Rhys went to Gruffudd ap Cynan in North Wales (Norwalliam) and ibidem inclusus in quadam eccelsia multis suis occisis uix euasit ('there shut up in a certain church, with many of his men killed, he barely escaped'). C errs in saying that Gruffudd went to Dyfed (perrexit ad deuet; perhaps a scribal error for going from Dyfed), but agrees that ibi in quadam ecclesia

[37] P and R, on the other hand, only name Hugh, earl of Shrewsbury (hu yarll amwythic). S names both earls.
[38] Possibly capiens in B is a residual of the missing lewelin f. cadugan.
[39] Now exemplified, principally, by London, British Library, Cotton MS Vespasian E. 4. This has not been edited in full, but Luard extracted from it for 'Annales Prioratus de Wigornia' (Luard iv), and Liebermann 1879 provides further extracts. Luard describes Vespasian E. 4 as a Winchester manuscript.
[40] P, amwythic.
[41] P, R and S all call the castle Cenarth Bychan. This is identified with Cilgerran Castle, Pembrokeshire (NGR SN 195431).

conclusus multis de familia sua interemptis uix euasit ('there shut up in a certain church, with many of his followers done away with, he barely escaped').[42]

In the following annal (b1138/c437) B says it was Owain ap Cadwgan who was killed in the burning the uilla of Carmarthen, whereas C calls him Owain ap Caradog.[43] The confusion in B is with the more famous Owain ap Cadwgan who was killed the same year in a skirmish with the Flemings, as C goes on to note. The annal in B has the appearance of an abbreviation.

The annals b1140 and c439 note the battle of Maes Maen Cymro (B, maismain cemro; C, mays maynkembro), which is not named in P, R or S. Here, B makes a slight slip, reading vero for filius in Hywel ab Ithel's name (B, hoelus vero ythail).

B does not have an annal for the White Ship disaster off Barfleur in 1120 (c441),[44] and C does not have an annal for the killing of Gruffudd ap Sulhaearn (b1144). The next annal in B (b1145) is both damaged and perhaps deficient compared to c443.[45] B has also erred in the next annal (b1146), where it numbers the uncles that Cadwallon ap Gruffudd slew at four instead of three (c444), by reading filios owini . . . as scilicet owinum . . . And at the end of the same annal, B does not give the name of the brother, Maredudd, slain by Morgan ap Cadwgan.

B and C vary in their annal on the expulsion of Gruffudd ap Rhys (b1149/c447), B saying that he was compelled to flee to Ireland, C simply saying that he was expelled from his land by King Henry. C also notes the death of Daniel ap Sulien.[46] In b1150/c448, B supplies a detail not in C, saying that Llywelyn ab Owain, captured by his uncle Maredudd, was handed over to Pain fitz John.[47] B has apparently suffered an eye-skip in b1151 to an item which also appears in b1152, the killing of Madog ap Llywarch by his first cousin, Meurig (madauc filius liwarch a meuruc consobrino suo occisus est). The second appearance, in b1152, is in the correct place, as is shown by c450, the corresponding annal in C.[48] It is puzzling to understand how the copyist could have returned from the eye-skip to the beginning of the annal containing the item to which they had skipped without correcting the error. In b1152, B has omitted the patronymic of Ieuaf ab Owain. In C's next annal (c451), it says that Meurig ap Meurig was deprived of his eyes, whereas B says eyes and testes. On the dedication of the new church at St Davids (b1153; c451), B calls it the church of Menevia

[42] P does not mention a slaughter, saying the prelates (preladyeid) of the church prevented Gruffudd ap Cynan's servants from dragging Gruffudd ap Rhys from the church. P also says it was the church of Aberdaron, on the Llŷn peninsular, Gwynedd, in which Gruffudd had found sanctuary.
[43] P also says it was Owain ap Caradog.
[44] P, R and S give an account of the circumstances, but do not name the port (C barbefleth; cf. Dauzat 1989, which gives the form Barbeflet from 1163).
[45] There was a word between meirionnyth and spoliauerunt et armentis, now unreadable (perhaps deleted) but no more than half a dozen letters long. The later copy of B in Harley MS 838 has merionnith spoliauerunt armentis.
[46] P says that Daniel was 'mediator between Gwynedd and Powys' and was archdeacon of Powys when he died.
[47] The copyist has written paui, but his exemplar must have read pain.
[48] And in the corresponding annals in P, R and S.

(meneuensis ecclesie), while C calls it the church of St David (ecclesie sancti dauid). B (b1154) implicates Einion ab Owain in the killing of Cadwallon ap Gruffudd by his cousin, Cadwgan ap Goronwy, and specifies that it took place in Nanheudwy. It also dignifies Maredudd ap Bleddyn with the title 'leader' (possibly 'duke') 'of the Powysians' (dux powisorum).

With the death of Maredudd ap Bleddyn, the chronicles come to a temporary halt, with some empty annals preceding the death of Henry I of England (1135) and the subsequent years of civil war of Stephen's reign. B alone inserts one of its English items (b1156) into this gap. This note, found also in Cotton Vespasian E. 4, is erroneous, saying that Robert, duke of Normandy, died in prison at Gloucester, whereas he actually died in Cardiff Castle and was buried in the abbey church of St Peter in Gloucester.[49] From the outset, B and C each record the reign of Stephen markedly differently. The underlying chronicle seems to have consisted mainly of Welsh events, but the last two years before Stephen's death are missing. However, the chronicles clearly knew how many years ought to have been shown between the death of Henry I and the end of Stephen's reign: B even states this in its annal for 1135 (b1157), 'Stephen . . . who reigned for nineteen years less nine weeks' (Stephanus . . . qui regnauít per xix annos exceptís ix ebdomadibus). In a further retrospective manner, B calls Henry 'the first' (henricus primus), while C (c456) calls him 'king of England' (rex anglie). C gives a date both by Incarnation years and by the year of the current decennovenal cycle,[50] and does not mention Stephen, but simply notes that there was then 'utmost discord between the French and the Britons, but the Britons were the victors'. The annals for 1136 and 1137 are fuller in B (b1158/b1159) than in C (c457/c458), and C has a unique annal at c459, unparalleled in B, P, R or S, possibly representing events of 1138, since its next annal, c460, is for events of 1139–40.[51] In c462, C makes a clear distinction between Hywel ap Maredudd (ap Rhydderch) and Hywel ap Maredudd ap Bleddyn, whereas B has 'Hywel ap Rhydderch' for Hywel ap Maredudd ap Rhydderch (b1163), and 'Hywel ap Bleddyn' for Hywel ap Maredudd ap Bleddyn (b1164). C has an additional Welsh event here, the assassination of Hywel and Cadwgan, sons of Madog, by the sons of Idnerth, 'through the machinations of Elias de Say'.[52] In their next annal, b1165/c463, B and C are very similar, but their following annal, b1166/c464, is substantially different. C does not say why Cadwaladr called to himself a fleet from Ireland, but does say who two of the captains were, contra B. After Cadwaladr and Owain are reconciled, B calls the members of the fleet germanici, while C calls them Hybernienses; ybernienses.[53]

The annals in b1167 and c465 have nothing in common. B errs in calling Gilbert fitz Gilbert (Gilbert de Clare, earl of Pembroke) Gilbert comes filius Willelmi. In the following annal (c466), C does not give Hugh de Mortimer his territorial name (ab hugone occisus est; B, hugo de mortuo mari), but adds an item not in B (b1168), the killing of Meurig ap Madog through the treachery of his own men. In c468, Gilbertus comes stragore is a distortion of strangboga (b1171), and c469 has a displacement of the note of the death in prison of Robert, duke of Normandy, brother of King Henry, which B has placed correctly in its annal for 1134 (b1156; see above). B notes here (b1171, '1149'), the death of Robert, earl of Gloucester and son of King Henry, in 1147, but B is now two years in advance of the AD year. B lists the deaths of the following year in a different order to C, placing Uchdryd of Llandaff first, while C has Bernard of St Davids first, and notes the length of his episcopate (thirty-three years). C also notes the death of a third bishop, Robert of Hereford. B and C vary in their items in b1173 and c471. C does not note Cadwaladr (ap Gruffudd ap Cynan) building a castle at Llanrhystud, or his grant of his part of Ceredigion to his son Cadwgan (b1173), and B does not note Owain ap Gruffudd building a castle in Iâl, or Madog ap Maredudd building the castle of Oswestry (c471). But both chronicles note Madog's gift of Cyfeiliog to his nephews (nepotes), Owain and Meurig, sons of Gruffudd (ap Maredudd). The next annal in B (b1174) has no equivalent in C. It notes the expedition of Henry, the future king, early in 1153, and has a counterpart in Cotton Vespasian E. 4 in its annal for 1152.[54] B also adds a spurious item to the end of its next annal (b1175) about the Empress and her son, Henry, 'who was duke of Normandy and count of Anjou', arriving in Wareham (Dorset). The Empress Matilda left England in 1148, and never returned; B's note doubtless refers again to Henry's expedition of 1153, and is possibly due to the misreading of an annal that said 'the son of the Empress' rather than 'the Empress and her son'. The next annal in C (c474) is terse, and the first item is defective, making Cadell, Rhys and Maredudd 'sons' of Hywel and 'grandsons' of Owain, whereas B makes it clear that Cadell and his brothers, sons of Gruffudd, attacked Hywel ab Owain (b1176). B is the only chronicle to state a precise season for this attack, 'around the feast of the Purification' (2 February). Both B and C note the ambush in which Cadell was seriously wounded by the men of Tenby, but C then jumps to events of 1153. B notes Maredudd and Rhys's destruction of Loughor Castle (castellum lychur),[55] and then jumps to Rhys' ravaging of Cyfeiliog, an item which P places in its annal for 1153 [S, 1152]. Both B and C note the death of David, king of Scots (May 1153) and B also notes the death of Ranulf, earl of Chester (December 1153). C also has here the first of the items in a sequence of papal entries, the death of Pope Eugene III (July 1153) who was succeeded by Anastasius IV.[56]

The next annal in C (b475) notes the death of King Stephen, again by decennovenal reckoning, and the accession of Henry, 'grandson of the great Henry', and the death of Pope Anastasius IV who was succeeded by Adrian IV. The corresponding annal in B (b1177) is empty.

C is the only chronicle to tell us that Maredudd ap Gruffudd ap Rhys died from poisoning (c476), but B is fulsome about Maredudd's brother, Rhys (the Lord Rhys), inheriting his land (b1178), again suggesting its annal is retrospective. Their next annals (b1179/c477) are broadly similar, but B makes clear that the advance of Owain ap Gruffudd (Owain Gwynedd) into Ceredigion was the reason for Rhys ap Gruffudd's throwing up an earthwork, and later a castle, at Aberdyfi. Here, B and C note Cadell ap Gruffudd's pilgrimage to Rome, noted by P, R and S in their annal for 1152 (recte 1153), three years earlier. The annal in B about Henry's invasion of North Wales (b1180) is much longer than its equivalent in C (c478), but it is C that says that Henry was aided by Madog ap Maredudd. B alone notes William Trenchemer[57] amongst the many casualties in the seaborne assault on Anglesey, and notes that Henry fitz Gerald, also killed there, was said by some to have been a son of Henry I of England. In the following annal (b1181/c479), B is again much longer and supplies more detail than C, and this is also true of the next two years, where C is minimal, omitting much of what is said in B. C says nothing about the abortive attack on Cadwaladr ap Gruffudd and his confederates, Hywel and Cynan ab Owain, by the earl Reginald and his fellow earls, the earl of Bristol and Earl Roger de Clare (b1182), and nothing about Cadwallon ap Madog's escape from Worcester (b1183).

In their next very brief annal (b1185/c482), both B and C note that Rhys ap Gruffudd took two castles by force, the second of which was Llandovery (B, llanamdewri; C, lanamdeuri), but the first of which B calls dinwileir, and C de Walwerin.[58] The following annals in B and C (b1186/c483) are very similar, but B says that Einion ab Anarawd was murdered 'treacherously in his sleep' by Gwallter ap Llywarch, C stating only the bare fact of the killing. B shows sympathy for Einion, calling him inclitus dux ('illustrious leader'). The next year (b1187/c484) saw an alliance of all the Welsh leaders against Henry, 'rejecting the yoke of the French' as B has it; but B has details of the lead up to this general uprising, whereas C says only that 'all the Welsh leaders were allied against Henry, king of England' (omnes duces cambrie in vnum contra henricum regem anglie coniurauerunt). B and C have broadly similar accounts of Henry's campaign in Wales the following year (b1188/c485), and although C is briefer it does state the number of Welsh hostages who suffered mutilation as twenty-two. C also notes that the Teifi river ran red with blood for two days, but this seems out of place, and may refer to the capture of Rhys ap Gruffudd of Cardigan Castle, which B notes was thanks to the treachery of the cleric, Rhygyfarch. B has a unique item here (b1188) about a rabid wolf in Carmarthen that bit forty men who almost all immediately died. In its next annal (b1189), B refers to the otherwise unknown Robert son of Mor (Robertus filius mor), and has a duplicate note of the death of the Empress Matilda (obiit matilda imperatrix; died 10 September 1167). This notice, equivalent to that in Cotton Vespasian E. 4, s.a. m.c.lxvii, is under the nominal year in B '1167', but both B and C have a separate note of the Empress's death under b1190/c487, their [57] Literally 'cut-the-sea', a nickname for a sailor. An Alan Trenchemer appears in the Pipe Roll for 1175 (Reaney and Wilson 1995, s.n. Trenchmer).

[58] I.e. Tafolwern. The earliest recorded form of Tafolwern is Dwalwern for dywal wern, interpreted by Anglo-Norman scribes as 'de Walwerin' or 'de Walwern' (see b1190). The only aspect of the annals in the Brutiau for AD 1162 that they share with B or C is the place-name 'Tafolwern', which appears in C (de Walwerin) and in P, R and S (P and S, kastell Walwern; R, castell Dafalwern). P and S have the form Dynwylleir for Dinwileir in their annal for AD 1159 (R, kastell Dinwileir), evidently a completely different place. The taking of Tafolwern is attributed in the Brutiau to Hywel ab Ieuaf, Rhys not appearing in their annal for 1162 at all. This suggests that the statement in c482 that one of the castles taken by Rhys was de Walwerin (i.e. Tafolwern) is an error. For the history of the place-name Tafolwern, see Owen and Morgan 2007. For locations suggested for the lost Dinwileir or Dinweilir, see Brown 1959, p. 266, fn. 7.

annal for the actual year 1167 (B's chronological apparatus being still a year in advance). Here the Empress' name is given as Mahalt (B) and Mahaud (C).

The annals in b1191 and c488 are almost identical, C adding an item about the daughter of Henry II (another Matilda) being given to the duke of Saxony, but they have nothing in common with the corresponding annal in P, R or S. Similarly, b1192 and c489 only differ in minor details, but here they do correspond to the first item in P, R and S, 1168 (recte 1169).

B has one annal for events of 1170 (b1193) which C spreads over three (c490, c491 and c492).[59] B is erroneous in having miscopied obiit as scilicet in its statement of the death of Cadwaladr, Owain Gwynedd's younger brother, and C does not mention Cadwaladr's death, or that of his brother Hywel ab Owain at the hands of another brother, Dafydd, and his followers. B and C are very similar for the next three years (1171–73), but B has another duplicate, caused by its faulty chronological apparatus: the discord between King Henry and his son noted at both b1195 and b1196. This 'discord' was the start of the 'Leicester War' of 1173, and the first reference to the discord is followed by a brief note of the capture of the earl of Leicester. The earl was captured at the battle of Fornham in October 1173, but Cotton Vespasian E. 4 erroneously notes the dispute between Henry and his son, and the capture of the earl, under its annal for 1175. B also has a more substantial duplicate note on the defeat of the earl and his capture under the year it calls 1175 (b1197). B has an erroneous note of the capture of the king of Scots, William the Lion, whom it calls 'David'. C has one annal (c496) for two in B (b1197 and b1198), and the note of the death of Reginald, earl of Cornwall, in c496 is very similar to that in b1198.

After their next annal, b1199/c497, where they have much in common, both B and C chronicles show signs of a hiatus. C has no equivalent to b1200, which is a very brief note of the death of the otherwise unknown Morgan Patta (perhaps the Morgan ap Maredudd noted in P, R and S, 1177). Morgan's cognomen is inexplicable as a Welsh byname, and perhaps derives ultimately from the Old English or Old Norse words for 'toad'.[60] B and C both mark the first year of the decennovenal cycle of 1178 (b1201/c498), but here C has one of its papal items, the end of the schism between Alexander III and his competitor anti-popes, of whom C only names the first, Victor IV, who had died in 1164. C also notes the eclipse of 13 September 1178, but puts it into a separate annal (c499). B and C have nothing in common for their annals for [59] P, R and S also divide these events over three annals, but the order is significantly different: Owain Gwynedd's death is noted under the same year as that of Meurig ab Addaf (S, 1169); Hywel ab Owain's death is in the next year (P and S, 1170); and then Thomas Becket's death, Earl Richard's expedition to Ireland, and the death of Diarmid, king of Leinster are in the next (S, 1171). Cadwaladr ab Owain's death is recorded in the annal for 1172.

[60] The name Padda existed in the seventh century, as that of one of the priests who converted the South Saxons (Bede, HE, iv.13), but it may have been coined afresh in the late Anglo-Saxon period as a nickname meaning ‘toad’ or ‘frog’ (OE padde or pade or ON padda). The name Patta, if indeed it is the same as the byname of Wulfmær Pætta recorded in the Winchester Liber Vitae c. 1030, may have meant ‘fleshy or plump’, though a Scandinavian word with the same root developed the meaning ‘small child’ (Tengvik 1938, p. 324).

1179–80, but both have annals noting the demolishing and rebuilding of the church at St Davids (b1204/c501). After this, B and C have nothing in common until their annal for the Battle of the Horns of Hattin, which they call the defeat at the Tyberiad Sea, in 1187. Here B (b1209) refers anachronistically to Richard as 'king of the English' upon his taking the Cross; C correctly states that it was his father, Henry, who took the Cross along with Frederick I, the Holy Roman Emperor, and Philippe II, king of the French. Both B and C note the appearance of a comet (b1210/c508), which B says was ever a portent of regime change, and signalled the death of King Henry; but their annals for the following year (b1211/c509) have nothing in common, B noting only Welsh events, C noting only the death of Henry II of England.

	[c510] Ann*us* [178]

[178] An extra year in C.

Chronological concordance 954–1189

Column 1: Probable actual AD years (many, if not most, reckoned by Annunciation-style years, 25 March–24 March); firm dates from external sources in bold.
Column 2: B-text annals, with the AD dating apparatus shown in italics from its commencement at b1119 (1097).
Column 3: C-text annals. ('1104'?) = compiler perhaps had in mind.
Column 4: Brut y Tywysogyon (P) and Brenhinedd y Saesson (S) dating apparatus; all years in normal italics as given in S; years in bold as given in P and S. P and S both note the first years of several decennovenal cycles (primus decennouenalis); these are shown as '(p.d.)' in the table, and appear in both P and S unless otherwise indicated. B and C have a single p.d. over this period, at AD 1178.
